In the afternoon with an organization test in which a large number of organizations of the town are expected to take part, together with floats and other paraphernalia, the day in Chelsea promises to be a big event of the year. The Twenty-fifth Michigan Volunteer Infantry Regiment of the Civil War met for its fifty-ninth annual reunion in G. A. R. Hall Wednesday September 10. There was a business meeting at 11:30 a. m., followed by a banquet at 12:30. This was served by the Daughters of Veterans.

The Twenty-fifth Michigan Regiment has a noted record for achievement and the large part it played in the Civil War is well known. Col. A. W. Williams, of Ypsilanti was in command with 1,012 officers and men on its roll.

The regiment left Jackson September 1, 1862, for Washington as part of the army of the Potomac under General Burnside.

The flag that was presented to the regiment by the town of Jackson during the war until the spring of 1864 when because of its tattered condition, it was returned to the state and is now a priceless possession of the State in Lansing. The presentation was made by the late Mrs. Austin Blair, wife of the war governor of Michigan.

The Twenty-fifth Regiment was mustered out of service May 30, 1865, having lost 290 men in action during the 30 engagements with the enemy. It is hoped that of the 40 or more that survive of the regiment a good representation will be present at the reunion.

Beside James S. Spencer, 214 West Pearl St., Jackson, and Anson Cro-man, Munith, there remain two local members, John Seashie, Chelsea, member of G. A. B. and C. C. Dorr, Sharon, Co. F.

Program will end at six o'clock, or as soon thereafter as possible. Entertainment for supper. Evening program opened with concert by band of forty pieces.

GREGORY BANK ROBBED IN DAYLIGHT HOLD-UP

Assistant Cashier Locked in Vault While Bandits Scoop Up Money and Securities.

On Friday afternoon of last week, five men in a Cadillac car drove up to the bank at Gregory, four of them entered the bank, leaving the fifth at the wheel of the car with motor running, and forcing Howard Howlett, assistant cashier of the bank, into the vault, scooped several thousand dollars in currency and bonds into bags and made their escape without the populace of Gregory being the wiser. Robert Reed, a patron who entered the bank during the hold-up, was also "forced" into the vault with Howlett and the two effected their release about five minutes later with the aid of screw driver and flashlight.

Approximately $5,000 was taken, according to officials of the banking institution, the entire amount being covered by insurance. While no trace of the robbers has been as yet reported, notes for large amounts have been found on the Fred Durkee farm at Clear Lake, which are believed to have been in the loot taken from the Gregory bank. The notes were found by Chris Mays.

A WOMAN TO RULE

Texas is to have a woman governor, Mrs. Ferguson. Her campaign and victory got newspaper space in every state, not only because she was the first woman to have a ghost of a chance at a governorship, but because the Ku Klux Klan fought her hotly. Anybody who has lived in Texas knows why the Klan and various other organizations and individuals opposed the Ferguson machine.

But no matter what Texas thought about Mrs. Ferguson's ability or associates, evidently the Klan was even more unpopular. The Klan wasn't defeated, however, as some headlines insist: the Klan just failed to defeat Mrs. Ferguson. It was on the offensive, not the defensive, it claims with much reason.

Anyhow, we can soon see what a woman governor is capable of. Her husband was governor, so she knows the technical details. But most of all, one can lead if followers are loyal. The question is, will Texas respect and support their woman ruler? Would any state?

Women take great interest in this case. It is a victory for the sex, politically. All over the nation women will take courage, set their ambitions a peg higher and demand recognition with just a bit more emphasis. It is the beginning of an era of "nice-looking" by the home-makers.

Farmers & Merchants Bank

Under State and National Control

ment plays a bigger part than logic in the various beliefs. Some women are probably jealous. Some women are probably just out to show men what they can do. Neither attitude will win a medal, of course.

Mrs. Ferguson will be a pioneer, and none was ever a popular idol. She will meet plenty of difficulties, and plenty of lukewarm, patronizing indifference. There will be much hostility, in Austin and over the state. She may get excited or puffed and make a fizzle. Then men are liable to say, "I told you so," and women will apologize for her. On the other hand, she may make a model governor, bringing all the traditional feminine qualities like sweetness, sympathy, goodness, and idealism into an office which needs them sorely.

Then women will feel more proud and more will yearn for office. It is an excellent testing-period and place. Watch for results.

POLITICS AND FARMERS

Both Davis and La Follette insist that the bumper-farm prices and crops are due not to political intervention but to the ways of Providence. The Republicans have not claimed the credit, so Providence may be thanked. But the eager interest all three candidates take in the farmer--on the eve of election--may alleviate his wrath against politics in general and his most-hated party in particular. Every administration makes long and pretty speeches about the farmer being the backbone of our national life and necessary for our prosperity. Yet the farmer, like the fabled cat, usually pulls chestnuts out of the fire and gets nothing for it.

So the parties are wooing the farmer's vote most ardently, with flowers and soft speeches and melting smiles. But the farmer's welfare or improvement isn't the issue in this campaign, and he knows it. He will vote as a man and citizen for the things he believes.

A PRINCE IS HERE

We have had a steady procession of visiting royalty from Europe, some of dubious rank, and nearly all inclined to tell us our faults. We are used to Counts, Dukes, and Lords, and even a prince or two.

But the Prince of Wales is getting a tremendous welcome. There are various reasons. He's a nice kid, a bachelor, soon to be a king, an outdoor prince, modest, and from our biggest neighbor, England. All add to his popularity. All that newspaper say about his visit "cementing trans-Atlantic friendship" is true. It won't do much else, except get some of our women excited in the neighborhood of the left bronchial tube, and arouse our Irish sympathizers to sarcastic comments. Strangely enough, however, we Americans who have foregone royalty and titles for ourselves make a big fuss over them when they cross the briny deep. Democracy has had a hard time breaking loose.

TOES AND TRAITS

A French scientist--as he calls himself--says a person's character can be told by his toes. A large, flat foot signifies violence; a flat foot, flatness and orderly life; a large, great toe a criminal tendency; a large heel laziness; curved toes, passion, etc. That's a very interesting idea. Many people claim to tell character, as well as past and future, by lines in the hands and bumps in the nose and on the head. Because such are not proved or even plausible "sciences" they have many devotees. At any rate, the only harm they can do is to give a person a mistaken idea of his faults and abilities. The nice things they "reveal" won't blight any lives.

The Northern Pacific Railroad has insured 50,000 employees of all kinds, ages, and periods of service. Many, doubtless, couldn't get a policy from any company because of physical condition. It is by far the largest example of group insurance by any employer. Yet there is no intention of charity or philanthropy. Most of the insured will so regard it and be grateful, but it is just a business proposition, expected to return its cost and more to the railroad.

It is another sign that men are being considered as a part of the machinery, as automata which work best when well treated, and have no higher relation. At any rate, the better treatment given, the better, no matter what its reason. Engines and cars and water tanks and stations are protected. They are kept in repair, and a fund is kept to replace them. Employees deserve more attention.

The modern theory is that they are a part of their business, partners with the owners. They have dedicated their lives and interest and ambitions to their work, they say, and although the risks are slight they expect to profit by the company's gains. That theory has some sound reasoning, and may partly explain such actions as that of the Northern Pacific.

WOMEN AT WAR

Two women had a fist fight near Alexandria, La., last week over the husband of one. A knife was used unfairly and the issue is still unsettled.

Two Paris dancers, Augustine and Blanche, tried the same method of deciding who was to have the love of Beau Pierre. This was also a fizzle as the astute man scorned them both. The dainty girls are now friends again and Beau Pierre is fairly free.

The Louisiana husband may feel chummy to have women fight for his love. But he shouldn't. He might feel ashamed with more reason. Beau Pierre is the Solomon of them all.

Keep Clean
Cleanliness is the foundation of sanitation and sanitation is the first step toward good health. Clean food is very apt to be safe food; clean hands will not often convey disease to the mouth; and a clean body will resist disease far more successfully than a dirty body will.

One Thing He Did Know
A magnate on trial had a very eloquent attorney. The summing up speech attracted a large gallery, and one of the listeners was so deeply impressed that he leaned over to the defendant and said: "What a lawyer that man is. Pearls of wisdom drop from his mouth." "I don't know about that," responded the magnate grudgingly. "But I do know that what he is saying is costing me at least a dollar a word."

Legend of the Wagtail

Here is a pretty Portuguese legend of the wagtail: "When the Virgin Mary fled into Egypt with the infant Christ, a wagtail followed, obliterating the trail by brushing away with its tail the donkey's footprints. Our Lady therefore blessed it, giving it the power to kill the hawk by attacking it under the wing."

Bitter Will

Following is an extract from a will recently probated in Manchester, England: "I desire that my wife shall not receive one penny from my estate, for she and her son have led me a hell-upon-earth life, and when it pleases the Almighty to call me, it will also please me to be taken from such a woman."

Ann Arbor has grown from a city of 9,770, 52 years ago, to more than 23,000 inhabitants, according to an article appearing in the Times News of Tuesday. The former figures are quoted from a directory published 52 years ago and owned by Eugene F. Williams of that city.

With the beginning of next week comes strict enforcement of the "Stop" signs at the intersections of Main with other streets in the village. The fact that Main street is a state trunk line and that state laws give trunk line traffic the right of way, has brought about a condition which makes it dangerous for traffic approaching from other streets to drive onto the trunk line without stopping, hence the village ordinance passed a month ago and designed to co-operate with state traffic laws. Passing of the village ordinance gives authority to the village marshal to enforce this law and it is stated this will be strictly done with the advent of next week.

J. S. GREEN ASCENDS ALFALFA THRONE WITH 157 ACRES OF IT

Michigan has a new alfalfa acreage king. He is Jesse S. Green of Do- walgia, Cass County Farm Bureau member of Wayne township. His 157 acres of alfalfa takes the crown from the brow of William Smith, Tuscola County member of Colling, and permits Mr. Green to doff the lid he is wearing and wear his honors until someone comes along and beats his record.

The Farm Bureau News thought it had uncovered a regular alfalfa empire when Mr. Smith showed 85 acres. But 157 acres is another story. Our original alfalfa king was Jahlal Davis, Farm Bureau member of Fenton, Livingston county. He had 60 acres. Every two weeks so far there has been a new king.

To say it or not to say it? Mr. Green is answering the question for Cass county. He told how he does it, as follows: "I am mowing 98 acres of alfalfa this year, pasturing 20 acres and sowing 39 acres this spring, making 157 acres in all. I plowed up 20 acres last fall and put it to other crops.

"I started sowing alfalfa seven years ago this spring, at the same time making an application of about two tons of finely ground limestone per acre, bought from the Solvay company. I have used about 12 carloads, averaging from 30 to 35 tons per acre.

"Sometimes I have plowed the ground in the fall, other times in the spring, but prefer to have it plowed in the fall. I have usually sowed the alfalfa as early as possible in the spring, keeping the ground cultivated and sowing the seed from the first to the middle of June. I always inoculate the seed, usually with culture from the Michigan Agricultural College, but I have used soil from an inoculated field with success.

"In order to get the hay harvested I have rented the crop to my neighbors, giving one-third to have two-thirds of it put in my barn. In regard to selling, I have usually had no trouble in selling at the barn, but have been some of it. I think at the price this past year it would pay to bale.

"In conclusion, I would say that it is essential on my soil to sow at least two tons of finely ground limestone to insure a successful seeding. I would not bother with any form of coarse lime."

TIMES DO CHANGE

A man was motoring up the drive to his country house with a business friend whom he was going to entertain over the week-end. "There's part of my family," he said, "having tea on the piazza now." "Ah, yes, indeed," beamed the business friend. "What a charming group!" "I suppose the young girl in the short frock is your daughter. The young fellow in the riding breeches would be, of course, your son, while the lovely lady in the pink silk tea gown and point lace is your wife, naturally."

"No," grunted the other man, "No, not at all. The young girl in the short frock is my wife's mother; the young fellow in the riding breeches is my wife herself, and the lady in the pink silk tea gown is my son, a sophomore who is rehearsing today for the new revue, where he takes a female part." —Gilt and Glimmer.

Y.D. Exploded in Somewhat Ineffective Profanity.

lary of invective, but most of it was of the stand-and-fight variety. There is some language which is not to be used, unless you are willing to have it out on the ground, there and then. Y.D. had no such desire. Possibly a curious sense of honor entered into the case. It was not fair to call a young man names, and although there was considerable truth in Grant's remark that Y.D. was a bully, his bullying did not take that form. Possibly, also, he recalled that at that moment the obligation under which Zen's accident had placed him. At any rate he wound up rather lamely.

"Grant," he said, "if I want that hay next year I'll cut it, spite of a-h-h-h!"

"All right, Y.D.," said Grant, cheerfully. "Well see. Now, if you can spare me a horse to ride home, I'll have him sent back immediately."

Y.D. went to find Transley and arranged for a horse, and in a moment Zen appeared from somewhere.

"You've been quarreling with Dad," she said, half reproachfully, and yet in a tone which suggested that she could understand.

"Not exactly that," he parried. "We were just having a frank talk with each other."

"I know something of Dad's frank talks," he said. "I'm sorry. I would have liked to ask you to come and see me to see my mother. We were glad to see you. I can hardly ask you to come if you are going to be bad friends with Dad."

"No, I suppose not," he admitted. "You were very good to me; very decent," she continued.

At that moment Transley, Linder and Y.D. appeared, with two horses. "Linder will ride over with you and bring back the spare beast," said Y.D. Grant shook hands, rather formally, with Y.D. and Transley, and then with Zen. She murmured some words of thanks, and just as he would have withdrawn his hand he felt her fingers tighten very firmly about his. He answered the pressure, and turned quickly away.

Transley immediately struck camp, and Y.D. and his daughter drove homeward, somewhat painfully, over the blackened hills.

Transley lost no time in finding other employment. It was late in the season to look for railway contracts, and continued dry weather had made grading, or best, a somewhat difficult business. Influx of ready money, and of those who follow it had created considerable activity in a neighboring center which for twenty years had been the principal cowtown of the foothill country. In defiance of all tradition, and, most of all, in defiance of the predictions of the ranchers who had known it so long for a cowtown and nothing more, the place began to grow. No one troubled to inquire exactly why it should grow, or how. As for Transley, it was enough for him that team labor was in demand. He took a contract, and three days after the fire in the foothills he was excavating for business blocks about to be built in the new metropolis.

It was no part of Transley's plan, however, to quit loose touch with the people on the Y.D. They were, in fact, the center about which he had been doing some very serious thinking. His outspokenness with Zen and her father had had in it a good deal of bravado—the bravado of a man who could afford to lose the stake, and smile over it. In short, he had not cared whether he offended them or not. Transley was a very self-reliant contractor; he gave, even to the millionaire rancher, no more homage than he demanded in return.

Still, Zen was a very desirable girl. As he turned the matter over in his mind Transley became convinced that he wanted Zen. With Transley, to want a thing meant to get it. He always found a way. And he was now quite sure that he wanted Zen. He had not known that positively until the morning when he found her in the gray light of dawn with Denison Grant. There was a suggestion of companionship there between the two which made cut him to the quick. Like most ambitious men, Transley was intensely jealous.

Up to this time Transley had not thought seriously of matrimony. A wife and children he regarded as desirable accessories to a comfortable life—for the quiet and shade of that evening toward which every active man looks with such irrational fondness.</

cidedly helpless if your brake was not working, or the steering wheel out of order.

It's much the same with money matters.
It is a safe plan to have your money where it is always under your control, in a safe bank like ours, for instance. It is also to your advantage to know that you ture to set up an attraction which shall overrule their judgment, rather than act by judgment first and leave it to nature to take care of herself. How much better it would be to be perfectly frank—to boldly announce the purpose—to come as I now, come to you and say, 'Zen, I want to marry you. My reason, my judgment, tells me that you would be an ideal mate. I shall be proud of you, and I will try to make you proud of me. I will gratify your desires in every way that my means will permit. I pledge you my fidelity in return for yours. I—Zen, will you say yes? Can you believe that there is in my simple words more sincerity than there could be in any mad ravings about love? You are young, Zen, younger than I, but you must have observed some things. One of them is that marriage, founded on mutual respect which increases with the years, is a much safer and wiser business than marriage founded on a passion which quickly burns itself out and leaves the victims cold, unresponsive, with nothing in common. You may not feel that you know me well enough for a decision. I will give you every opportunity to know me better—I will do nothing to deceive you—I will put on no veneer—I will let you know me as I really am. Will you say yes?

He had left his seat and approached her; he was leaning close over her chair. While his words had suggested marriage on a purely intellectual basis he did not hesitate to bring his physical presence into the scale. He was accustomed to having his way—he had always had it—never did he want it more than he did now.

And although he had made his plea from the intellectual angle he was sure he was very, very sure there was more than that. This girl, whose very presence delighted him—intoxicated him—would have made him mad.

"Will you say yes?" he repeated, and his hands found hers and drew her with his great strength up from her chair. She did not resist, but when she was on her feet she avoided his embrace.

"You must not hurry me," she whispered. "I must have time to think. I did not realize what you were saying."

"Say yes now," he urged. Transley was a man very hard to resist. She felt as though she were in the grip of a powerful machine; it was as though she were being swept along by a stream against which her feeble strength was as nothing. Zen was as nearly frightened as she ever had been in her vigorous young life. And yet there was something delightful.

It would have been so easy to surrender—it was so hard to resist. "Say yes now," he repeated, drawing her close at last and breathing the question into her ear. "You shall have time to think—you shall ask your own heart—and if it does not confirm your words you will be released from your promise."

They heard the footsteps of her father approaching, and Transley waited no longer for an answer. He turned her face to his; he pressed his lips against hers.

CHAPTER VIII

Zen thought over the events of that evening until they became a blur in her memory. Her principal recollection was that she had been quite swept off her feet. Transley had interpreted her submission as assent, and she had not corrected him in the vital moment when they stood before her father that night in the deep shadow of the veranda.

"Y.D.," Transley had said, "your consent and your blessing! Zen and I are to be married as soon as she can be ready."

That was the moment at which she should have spoken; but she did not. She, who had prided herself that she would make a race of it—she, who had been able to slip out of a predicament in the nick of time—stood mutely by and let Transley and her father interpret her silence as consent. She was not sure that she was sorry; she was not sure but she would have consented anyway; but Transley had taken the matter quite out of her hands. And yet she could not bring herself to feel resentment toward him; that was the strangest part of it. It seemed that she had come under his domination; that she even had to think as he would have her think.

In the darkness she could not see her father's face, for which she was sorry; and he could not see hers, for which she was glad. There was a long moment of tense silence before she heard him say:

"Well, well! I had a hunch it might come to that, but I didn't reckon you youngsters would work so fast."

This was a stake worth working fast for, Transley was saying, as he shook Y.D.'s hand. "I wouldn't trade places with any man alive." And Zen was sure he meant exactly what he said.

She's a good girl, Transley, her father commented, "a good girl, even if a bit obstinate at times. She's got spirit, Transley, and you'll have to handle her with sense. She's a thoroughbred!"

Y.D. had reached his arms toward his daughter, and at these words he crossed them about her. Zen had never known her father to be emotional; she had known him to face matters of life and death without the quiver of an eyelid, but as he held her there in his arms that night she felt his big frame tremble. Suddenly she had a powerful desire to cry. She broke from his embrace and ran upstairs to her room.

When she came down her father and mother and Transley were sitting about the table in the living room; the room hung with trophies of the chase and of competition; the room which had been the nucleus of the Y.D. estate. There was a colored cover on the table, and the shaded oil lamp in the center sent a comfortable glow of light downward and about. The mammoth shadows of the three people fell on the log walls, darting silently from position to position with their every movement.

Her mother arose as Zen entered the room and took her hands in a warm, tender grip. "You're really leaving us," she said. "I'm not saying I object. I think Mr. Transley will make you a good husband. He is a man of energy, like your father. He will do well. You will not know the hardships that we knew in our early married life. Their eyes met, and there was a moment's pause.

"You will not understand for many years what this means to me, Zenith," her mother said, and turned quickly to her place at the table.

She could not remember what they had talked about after that. She had been conscious of Transley's eyes often on her, and of a certain spiritual exaltation within her. She could not remember what she had said, but she knew she had talked with unusual vivacity and charm. It was as though certain storehouses of brilliance in her being, of which she had been unaware, had been suddenly opened to her. It was as though she had been intoxicated by a very subtle wine which did not deaden, but rather quickened, all her faculties.

Afterwards, she had spent long hours among the foothills, thinking and thinking. There were times when the name of that strange exaltation burned low, indeed; times when it seemed almost to expire. There were moments—hours—of misgivings. She could not understand the strange docility which had come over her; the unprecedented willingness to have her course shaped by another. That strange willingness came as near to frightening Zen as anything had ever done. She felt that she was being carried along in a stream; that she was making no resistance; that she had no desire to resist. She had a strange fear that some day she would need qualities of self-direction, and those qualities would refuse to arise at her command.

She did not fear Transley. She believed in him. She believed in his ability to grapple with anything that stood in his way; to thrust it aside, and press on. She respected the judgment of her father and her mother, and both of them believed in Transley. He would succeed; he would seize the opportunities this young country afforded and rise in power and influence upon them. He would be kind, he would be generous. He would make her proud of him. What more could she want?

That was just it. There were dark moments when she felt that surely there must be something more than all this. She did not analyze her thoughts or give them definite form—but in these dark moments she feared that she was being tricked, that the whole thing was a sham which she would discover when it was too late. She did not suspect her mother, or her father, or Transley, one or all, of being parties to this trick; she believed that they did not know it existed. She herself did not know it existed. But the fear was there.

DOES COW TESTING ASSOCIATION PAY?

Five Hundred Washitaw Cows Have Yearly Cost of Feed and Production Record.

Last week the Saline Cow Testing Association completed its 12 months work and the tester, Ralph Stone, is summarizing records for the different herds in the association.

The Ann Arbor Association completed its first year—the first of July and is now on the second year's work. The tester has kept a complete record for every cow entered in the association and these records show the amount and value of product produced together with the total cost of feed consumed as well as the value of the product above the cost of feed. This last item is what the dairyman receives for his labor, interest on his investment, depreciation, etc. Some dairymen think that individual cows should record $100 value of product above the cost of feed in order for the dairyman to warrant keeping her in his herd. Cow Testing Associations spot the poor producers. One herd among the 52 which have already completed the first year's work shows that among 15 cows on test at least 7 of them were producing products valued less than $100 above feed cost. Four of these seven were around $50 and one of them as low as $12. Can a dairyman afford to keep such cows in his herd?

The above records would indicate that it would be better to dispose of the lowest producers and give more attention to the care and management of the remainder, if the herd owner was especially interested in making the largest possible amount from his herd.

PRESIDENT IS HOST TO 'BIG THREE'

Washington, D. C.—One of the outstanding features of the vacation trip of President Coolidge, who has just returned from a two weeks' stay at his father's farm in Vermont, was the visit of Henry Ford, Thomas A. Edison and Harvey S. Firestone.

On their annual camping trip, these three geniuses of industry and invention called upon the President on an automobile tour through New England, and for several hours discussed with him various problems and conditions. All three of them assured him of their hearty support of his candidacy for election.

The chief topic of conversation was the future prosperity of the country. The three camping companions assured the President that in their opinion the continued improving prosperity of the country depended upon the condition of the farmers. Agriculture must prove profitable for America to continue prosperous, they said.

"I think times are getting better, and for sound agricultural reasons," said Mr. Ford.

Interviewed during his call upon President Coolidge, Mr. Edison said: "We'll have great prosperity if the corn does not get nipped and crops in general are good."

Mr. Firestone declared that the farmer was the keystone of American prosperity.

Conditions in this country will continue to grow better so long as the farmer is prosperous," he said.

He is the barometer by which to judge conditions. His is the basic industry of the country, and the one upon which our prosperity depends."

After leaving the President's farm Mr. Ford, Mr. Edison and Mr. Firestone continued their tour through the Green Mountains, stopping now and then to talk with the people of rural New England and view the countryside. They spent the early part of their vacation at Mr. Ford's Wayside Inn, at South Sudbury.

Before visiting the President, Mr. Ford played host to 6,000 New England farmers at his Wayside Inn estate at South Sudbury, Mass. With supervised a plowing and agricultural demonstration, and invited the Farm Bureau Federation to use his grounds for its annual gatherings.

On the same day the Holstein-Friesian Association gathered at Mr. Firestone's old homestead in Columbiana county, Ohio, for its annual picnic, as the guests of Mr. Firestone, who sent his son, Harvey, Jr., to welcome them in his absence.

"I Don't See Why Not," He Declared.

Understand the general attitude of levity toward matrimonial advertisements. Apparently they are too open and above-board. Matrimony should not be committed in a round-about, indirect, hit-or-miss manner. A young man sees a girl whom he thinks he would like to marry. Does he go to her house and say, 'Miss So-and-so, I think I would like to marry you. Will you allow me to call on you so that we may get better acquainted, with that object in view?' He does not. Such brutal honesty would be considered almost brutal. He calls on her and pretends to be in the country. She pretends to be in the country. They start the farce by pretending a deceit which deceives nobody. They wait for na-

"You wouldn't know the change that has come about in a few months," said Transley, with enthusiasm. "Double shifts working by electric light, Y.D. What do you think of that? Men with rolls of money that would choke a cow sleeping out in tents because they can't get a roof over them. Why, man, I didn't have to hunt a job there; the job hunted me. I could have had a dozen jobs at my own price if I could have handled them. It's just as if prosperity was a river which had been trickling through that town for thirty years, and all of a sudden the dam up in the foothills gives away and down she comes with a rush. Lots which sold a year ago for a hundred dollars are selling now for five hundred—sometimes more. Old ranchers living on the bald-headed a few years ago find themselves today the owners of city property worth millions, and are dressing—uncomfortably—in keeping with their wealth, or vainly trying to drink up the surplus. So far sense and brains had nothing to do with it, Y.D., absolutely nothing. It has been fool luck. But the brains are coming in now, and the brains will get the money in the long run."

Transley paused and lit another cigar. Y.D. rolled his in his lips, reflectively.

"I mind some doins in that burg," he said, as though the memory of them was of greater importance than all that might be happening now.

Transley switched back to business. "We ought to be in on it, Y.D.," he said. "Not on the fly-by-night stuff, I don't mean that. But I could take twice the contracts if I had twice the outfit."

Y.D. brought his chair down on to all four legs and removed his cigar. "You mean we should hit her together?" he demanded.

"It would be a great compliment to me, if you had that confidence in me, and I'm sure it would make some good money for you."

"You have a hunch of horses running here on the ranch, eating their heads off. Many of them are broke, and the others would soon tame down with a scraper behind them. Let me put them to work. I'd have to have equipment, too. Your name on the back of my note would get it, and you wouldn't actually have to put up a dollar. Then we'd make an inventory of what you put into the firm, and what I put into it, and we'd divide the earnings in proportion."

"After payin' you a salary as manager, of course," suggested Y.D.

"That's immaterial. With a bigger outfit and more capital I can make so much more money out of the earnings that I don't care whether I get a salary or not. But I wouldn't figure on going on contracting all the time for other people. We might as well have the cream as the skimmed milk. This is the way it's done. We go to the owner of a block of lots somewhere where there's no building going on. He's anxious to start something, because as soon as building starts in that district the lots will sell for two or three times what they do now. We say to him, 'Give us every second lot in your block and we'll put a house on it.' In this way we get the lots for a trifle, perhaps for nothing. Then we build a lot of houses, more or less to the same plan. We put 'em up quick and cheap. We build 'em to sell, not to

INVESTING FOR Permanency and Profit

When the habit of saving and careful investing is established, a long step toward success and future independence has been established. New investors should be sure to start by investing their savings in institutions of proven worth, with a dividend and interest paying record extending over a period of years.

$8,500,000,000 in United States Loan Associations

The United States Comptroller reports over thirteen billions of dollars in the Savings Institutions of this country of which amount over $8,500,000,000 are invested in Building and Loan Associations. There are now more than 10,000 Loan Companies in the United States, serving more than 7,000,000 persons. In the state of Ohio alone, Savings & Loan Associations are serving 1,700,000 people.

THE STRENGTH OF ORGANIZATION

Building and Loan Associations or Companies in the United States with Seven Million Members and depositors, have stood the test of 92 years of our National history. In Ohio, they have more than a thousand of these Associations and Companies. Half the families in Ohio are now doing business with these Mutual Savings Associations and Companies as members, depositors or borrowers. Over 75 per cent of the homes built last year in Ohio were financed by Building and Loan Companies.

The Michigan Mutual Savings Association, consisting of many members, multiplies the strength, effectiveness and resources of each individual member. The many payments of the members; no one of which may be large in itself, taken together enables the Company to finance the building of many homes.

HERBERT HOOVER says: "Your Associations—true people's banks—encourage thrift throughout the nation—having made their assets sound and worthy of confidence. It is my earnest desire that the Savings and Loan Associations of the United States should be encouraged by public spirited citizens in every locality."
