Child Fatally Burned In Lyndon Barn Fire

Betty Lou Umstead, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Umstead of Lyndon township, died Saturday morning, June 24, at U. of M. hospital, Ann Arbor, from burns received when the barn on the Umstead farm, about five miles north-west of Chelsea was destroyed by fire Friday afternoon. The little girl, with her three sisters, Ruth, Marian and Virginia, were playing in the barn and it is believed they found some matches and lighted them.

Mrs. Umstead saw smoke coming from the barn, but before she could reach it, the main doorway was enveloped in flames. When Betty Lou saw her mother, she broke away from the other children and ran straight through the blaze. Her mother caught her and was painfully burned.

The other children escaped through another door just before the entire building broke into flames. They received minor burns.

The youngest girl was rushed to U. of M. hospital, where she died Saturday morning. Mrs. Umstead was taken to St. Joseph's Mercy hospital and it is believed she will recover.

Betty Lou was born May 10, 1930 in Chelsea, the daughter of Lawrence and Anna Umstead. She is survived by her parents, three brothers, Lawrence, Robert and Wesley, and three sisters, Ruth, Marian and Virginia, all at home; her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hagdon of Detroit and Mr. and Mrs. Newton Umstead of Pottstown, Pa.

Funeral services were held at 2:00 o'clock Sunday afternoon at the Staffan funeral home. Rev. Fred Matthews officiating. Interment was in Oak Grove cemetery.

Salem M. E. Church Will Celebrate Its 80th Anniversary

Celebration of the 80th anniversary of Salem M. E. church will be held Sunday, July 2, in connection with their annual homecoming event. The commemorative services will be held at 10:15 a. m. and 2 p. m., and a chicken dinner will be served at noon, to which the public is invited. A free-will offering will be accepted for the dinner.

All former pastors, members and friends are invited to attend the affair. Special music will feature both morning and afternoon services.

Rev. Henry W. Lenz, pastor of the church, has prepared the following history of Salem M. E. church:

A Brief Historical Sketch
Seven miles west of Chelsea, in one of the most beautiful rural districts of lower Michigan, is situated on a little knoll a church where every Sunday of the year a goodly company of people worship that are the direct descendants of the founders of Salem Methodist Episcopal church—the staunch pioneers of eighty years ago.

Into this quiet countryside came in 1852 a German Methodist minister, the Reverend Jacob Rothweiler. Visiting in the homes of these early settlers he was soon convinced that a church should be organized. In 1853, late in Spring, Rev. John Schweinfurth accomplished the organization of a church society, preaching in the humble log houses of that day to eager listeners. This method was pursued for about five years at the end of which, during the second pastorate of Rev. Schweinfurth, the first church edifice was erected. It was an humble frame building, still standing, and showing the ravages of 75 years of summer storms and winter blasts.

Salem church had been one of the preaching places in the Ann Arbor District, but in 1874 this church and Zion church in Trist, near Waterloo, became what for many years was known as the "Francisco Circuit."

The first pastorage was built while Rev. J. Schweinfurth served his third term as pastor here in 1869-1870 and was occupied by his successor, Rev. G. A. Renter in the fall of 1870. When it became evident that the first little church no longer sufficed for the growing congregation, a new, and more beautiful church was erected, in 1888, under the administration of Rev. George Miller (1887-1889); now a retired minister residing in Detroit.

Four years ago, while Rev. F. Ross was pastor, in the spring of 1929, the old pastorage, which had for almost 60 years been the pleasant domicile of 18 preachers' families, was destroyed by fire. Out of the ashes arose during the summer of 1929 a new, more convenient, modernly equipped pastorage.

During the eighty years, 28 pastors have ministered to the people of Salem church, and mention must be made in this connection of Mr. William Riemenschneider, who for more than 60 years served as local preacher (Continued on last page)

County Is Widening Cav. Lake Road

The County Road Commission has a force of men with trucks, grader and steam shovel at work on the road which skirts Cavanaugh Lake on the west side. The road will be graded and widened all the way from the Cavanaugh Lake road which runs along the south side of the lake, to the road which goes around the north side of the lake.

This improvement is being made as a result of the efforts of the Sylvan township board, although it is being done without cost to the township.

Rev. H. Zumstain presided at the altar and the service was opened with prayer, community singing and a selection by the choir. The anniversary sermon was preached by Rev. O. C. Laubenguy of Detroit, a former pupil of Rev. Schoen, while he was pastor at Chelsea.

C. E. Hunselman, president of the church board, extended a welcome to the guests, congratulating Rev. Schoen and presenting him with a purse of money in behalf of the congregation.

Greetings were extended by Rev. W. F. Jerome from the churches of Dexter; Rev. Merle Townsend from the Bible school; Rev. W. Brettonbach in behalf of the parish at Farmington; Rev. C. Rev. Schoen expressed his appreciation for the gifts and good wishes, and the service closed with prayer and singing of "Aldrie With Me."

Following the church service 175 guests enjoyed a fine banquet served in the church dining room by ladies of the parish. The Dexter high school orchestra furnished music during the banquet, also rendering several selections at the program following. Rev. C. Haag presided as toastmaster and toasts were given by Rev. Brettonbach, George Stech of the Brotherhood and William Peters of the Young People's Society. Rev. Zumstain also rendered a solo.

The guests departed wishing the pastor many more years of labor in his chosen field.

Rev. Schoen was ordained in 1893 at Bethel church, Freedom, and has preached successively in Detroit, Hahnbidge, Pipestone, Dowagiac, Waterville, Chelsea, Manchester, Farmington and Dexter. He was pastor of St. Paul's church, Chelsea, for 19 years.

WEEKLY NEWS BULLETIN

Frank D. Fitzgerald
Secretary of State

Lansing, Mich.—The total tax on gasoline you buy for your car after July 1, will be about 4 3/4 cents a gallon. The office of the secretary of state will collect the three cent state specific gas tax; the federal government will collect 1-1/2 cents (the last half cent being effective June 16), and the state board of tax administrators will collect its 3 per cent sales tax, which will equal about 1-4 of a cent a gallon. In many states of the union, the total state and national tax on gasoline will exceed the price of the fluid itself.

While the state may spend money in huge sums, it collects it almost penny by penny. The three per cent sales tax, effective July 1, is a sterling example. If retail business of the state is only half as large as it was in 1929, the state government will gather in, at the rate of three cents on each dollar you and everyone else passes over retail counters, a total of some $32,000,000 a year.

On July 1, next, Saturday, Frank D. Fitzgerald, secretary of state, will be the only republican elective department head in the capitol. On that date, two important departments will change commands. Murray D. Van Waggoner will take over the huge state highway department, and Dr. Paul E. Voelker will become superintendent of public instruction. They will succeed Grover C. Dillman and Webster H. Pearce, respectively. Mr. Fitzgerald is the only republican elective official to survive after two elections, those of Nov. 8 and April 3.

When Gov. William A. Comstock came back to his office Tuesday, after a visit on private business in New York City, he faced a tidal wave of bills passed by the legislature in the final days of the session. The measures were printed in their final "enrolled" form, during his absence. Among the most important bills awaiting his signature are the sales tax bill, the horse racing bill, and so far as public interest is concerned, the small loan bill.

Before he left, Governor Comstock vetoed the bill which would have given osteopaths all rights and privileges now enjoyed by medical doctors. Former Gov. Fred W. Green also vetoed such a bill two years ago.

Payment by every resident of the state, an annual tax of $2, for the financing of the estimated $6,000,000 old age pension payments, will reach one class of people heretofore not reached by any direct taxes. Even those not citizens, and not thus even entitled to vote in this state or nation, will be assessed.

The term "poll" tax, often misunderstood, refers not to a voting "poll" but to the somewhat literary term "poll," meaning a head. Thus, the poll tax is a head tax. This bill may or may not be approved by the Governor.

Question And Answer Dept.

Ques.—Will you please answer in your question column how long the Spanish-American War lasted?

Ans.—The duration of the Spanish-American War was three months and nineteen days. Diplomatic relations with Spain were severed April 21, 1898; the Cuban blockade was announced the next day, and war was declared by Spain on April 24, and was followed by the United States declaring war on April 25. Spain asked for and signed the peace protocol on Aug. 12, 1898.

Ques.—May I ask in your good paper what becomes of a cadet when he graduates from West Point? How do generals and other high officers get their positions? Also have any Negroes ever graduated from West Point?

Ans.—When a cadet graduates from West Point he is immediately commissioned a second lieutenant. After that, he is promoted in accordance with his ability and achievements, etc. Men holding the rank of General or other high office, came up from second lieutenant. There have been three Negro graduates from West Point. They are: Henry O. Flipper, in 1877; John H. Alexander, in 1887, and Charles Young, in 1889.

Ques.—I wish to ask if you can tell me how a President of the United States can keep his oath to defend the constitution and still favor repeal of the 18th amendment?

Ans.—You should remember that a President not only has the legal right, but is duty-bound to recommend amendments to the Constitution, if he considers such measures necessary and expedient. The Constitution provides legal means of amending the Constitution. Section 3, Article II states: "He (the President) shall from time to time give Congress information on the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may judge necessary and expedient."

Ques.—Will you please be kind enough to state in your question department if the gold in the United States treasury is coined into money?

Ans.—No. The gold is in bars, and only enough of it is coined into money to take care of the anticipated demand. Since gold is soft and wears away when handled as coin, keeping it in bars saves actual value. As a means of international exchange, it is valued by its fineness and weight.

Ques.—Did the fad of women wearing trousers originate in New York or Hollywood?

Ans.—Neither one. While the fad was popularized by the movie stars in Hollywood in their attempt to ape men, the idea originated on the farm, when the women in many parts of the country wore trousers and overalls. The hard-pressed women in some districts wear them because they have to. Others wear them because they are more practical for farm work. They do not tear or snag as easily as dress materials, and they allow the wearer more freedom in chasing cows, chickens, horses, etc., and working in the garden and fields. This they did long before Hollywood or New York thought of the idea.

Ques.—I was born on July 1, 1901. Will you please tell me on what day of the week I was born?

Ans.—As July 1, 1901, was on Monday, you therefore were born on "wash day."

Ques.—Having just recently got married, I wish to ask you if I should give my wife all the money she wants?

Ans.—No air-ee; there isn't that much money in the world.

Ques.—I would like to ask you if there is a radio in the White House, or does President Roosevelt listen in elsewhere? Does he give much attention to them?

Ans.—There are three radios installed in the White House—one in President Roosevelt's study, one in Mrs. Roosevelt's sitting room, and the third one in Secretary Early's office. As yet, the President and Mrs.

Roosevelt have not found much time to listen to radios. However, they do not miss any important events that are broadcast.

Ques.—Why is it difficult for a person to walk in a straight line when their eyes are closed?

Ans.—This is because very few people take exactly equal steps with their two legs; one leg usually steps out a little farther or the other a little shorter. When walking with the eyes open we automatically correct this.

Ques.—Do bees make their humming noise with their mouth?

Ans.—No. The humming of bees is due to the very rapid vibration of their wings.

Ques.—Is Mr. Bingham our Ambassador to England at present? Please give date of appointment if so.

Ans.—Yes, Mr. Bingham was appointed Ambassador to England the latter part of May, 1938, and was confirmed by the Senate a few days later.

Ques.—I would like to know if you could answer the following question in the question and answer column of your paper: When did the form "if" for "is" (example "fo" for "so") become obsolete in printing and writing?

Ans.—Up to about the time Thomas Jefferson was elected president of the United States the popular form of writing the letter "is" resembled the letter "if," but nevertheless it was not. Jefferson was the first to use the modern form of writing "is" and the old form gradually became obsolete.

Ques.—Have been reading your Question and Answer Department for some time. May I ask a question? Will you please tell me the right time to transplant Iris, Peonies and Spirea?

Ans.—Peonies, Iris and Spirea should be transplanted between the middle of June and the middle of July for best results. Planting should be made where the shrubs will get as much sunshine as possible. Soil should be soft, and planting should be about 2-12 inches deep. For further information write to any reputable floriculturist or to any nurseryman.

Parasites Live High in Air; Carried Many Miles

Plant disease spores, so small they cannot be seen with the naked eye, have been found at a height of 18,000 feet, according to the Department of Agriculture, observes a writer in Path-finder Magazine.

Planes of the army, navy and coast guard, as well as the dirigible Los Angeles, have been used to gather these data from the upper air. The spore collections are gathered by holding a nutrient-coated sterilized glass plate in the air a short time during the flight. Later the spores are isolated in the laboratory.

These tests show the danger from plant disease through movements of the upper air. At such altitudes spores could be carried thousands of miles to be deposited in some region where that plant disease had been unknown. This danger would indicate a need for spraying even though no disease was prevalent in the neighborhood.

Phone Conference Plan New Tool of Industry

One of the latest contributions to the swift transaction of business is the "Telephone Conference" plan, whereby a group of men seated at their desks in different cities can confer as intimately, one with another and with the entire group, as if gathered about the same table.

With business again stepping into high gear, W. M. Schroder, manager here for the Michigan Bell Telephone Company, today announced the telephone conference plan as a new and important tool of industry. Following a definite demand for such a setup, it was developed to aid in the speedier, more efficient and more economical transaction of business, particularly from the executive standpoint.

In the past, he said, if a number of executives, or a sales manager and his branch representatives in different cities, wanted to hold a discussion, it was necessary for them to gather in conference at some one point. Hours, and sometimes days of travel, at considerable expense, were required. Most of the group were taken away from their duties for a considerable period and the time of executives and supervisors is costly.

Now it is possible to hold such conferences by long distance telephone, with each person seated in his own office. Each participant can talk with and listen to any or all of the others. As many as six can take part in a long distance telephone conference.

Through the utilization of special switching equipment in the long distance office, the connections are set up a few minutes in advance of the conference. The rates are inexpensive.

More than a year ago, following a number of requests for service of this type, the first such telephone conference took place when an official of the Kellogg Company, of Battle Creek, seated in his own office, talked with sales managers in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati. Later the same day, he held a second conference with representatives in St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines and Minneapolis. Each man took part in the discussions and heard all the conversation of the others connected. The cost of the two 30-minute "meetings" was a very small fraction of what it would have cost to bring all the conferees to Battle Creek.

Those two telephone conferences were arranged more or less as an experiment by the Michigan Bell and the American Telephone & Telegraph Companies, but from them was worked out the present telephone conference plan.

The telephone conference plan is expected to be utilized in many ways, such as the launching of sales campaigns in widely separated territories; the quick discussion by headquarters and branches of price schedules or competitive situations; for giving detailed instructions or announcing new plans and policies; for consultations by physicians or attorneys; for boards of directors meetings; conferences between police or other law enforcement agencies, and even for visits and discussions by widely scattered members of families on anniversaries or in case of emergency.

GRANDPA'S GRADUATION

Your grandpa never saw the thing they call a graduation, Tho' I have graduated some In things I mustn't mention.

I never wore a cap, nor gown, Nor powdered my ambition, But bumped along thru many a storm And won my requisition.

Now, sure as cotton grows, my dears, We wish you great success, In all things you may undertake May you be greatly blessed.

We've asked the Lord thru many a prayer To guide you by his plan, In all your ways acknowledge him. He's promised you his hand. (Prov. 8:6)

Some disappointments you will have They come to one and all, It will not be all springtime, and It cannot be all fall.

Whatever the weather be, Be Brave, Just keep on keeping on, For rainbows never show themselves Until we've passed the storm.

Your Grandpa, Arthur Carlton, at the Home.

BROOKLYN — The Consolidated Cement Corporation plant at Cement City paid out $7,000 at their first real pay day this summer on Tuesday. It is expected that the new industrial relief plan will be worked out to employ more men in the cement industries where the production process is continuous. At the present time in some of the processes at Cement City plant men work in 12 hour shifts. If the new plan gets cooperation it will mean that the men in the continuous departments will work 6 hour shifts. The Cement City plant now employing about 150 men would under the possible new arrangement employ 250 men.—Exponent.

A few expressions of appreciation of

FORLORN ISLAND

by EDISON MARSHALL

The following comments by reviewers of this remarkable story that is to appear early in these columns, will give you an idea of its unusual interest.

"Perils and passion and Mother Nature on an island way up North containing a group of lost people and the civilized survivors of the wreck of Felix Horton's yacht. Mr. Marshall elaborates his tale with action, emotion and what-not where they will do the most good."—New York Herald-Tribune.

"It is a fast moving story filled with exciting incidents and picturesque details of the natives and their life on the island. It will not disappoint Mr. Marshall's readers."—New York Times.

"The plot simmers until it thickens and is then brought rapidly to a boil. The result is a dish that is as appetizing as the least. The story is good entertainment."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Hard adventure throughout. It feels good, too. The clean cold North... action is sudden, incredible, fierce and frightening... fine out-and-out stuff."—Washington Star.

"Edison Marshall has written another thrilling thriller. Most thrillers do not throb, and in most of them the love story is secondary. But with Edison Marshall the love story is the chief element, the leaven of the loaf, so to speak. For a thrilling thriller you won't find anything more full of interest than 'Forlorn Island'."—Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch.

It is the kind of a story that will cause you to await with eager interest the appearance of each new installment. Be sure to start it with the opening chapter.

Three Modern Graces

WHEN you say, "That man is a success", immediately you think of his money.

Of course money is not the only thing in the world, but without it success would have a faded and ragged appearance.

If you ask the "successful" man for his formula he will probably give you three basic rules to follow.

School Board Adds Teacher To Staff

The Chelsea Board of Education, at its regular meeting last week, found itself faced with the necessity of replacing one of the two teachers who had been dropped from the staff in the plans for next year. The decrease in the number of teachers from sixteen to fourteen was made as an economy move and with the intention of having the high school grades (7 to 12) handled by five teachers instead of by seven.

However, when the advance enrollment for next year was completed near commencement time, it was discovered that the handling of all the classes by five teachers and the superintendent would be a physical impossibility even though the superintendent taught the maximum number of classes allowed by State regulations. It therefore became necessary to employ an additional teacher and to bring the total number back to fifteen.

In this situation, the superintendent recommended that a man be employed to take over the surplus classes and, at the same time, to begin the establishment of a course in vocational agriculture which would gradually be developed into a full four-year course operating under the provisions of the Smith-Hughes Law which provides federal aid in the payment of 50 per cent of the salary of this teacher. This recommendation of the superintendent was adopted by the board and the position has been filled by the employment of Richard B. Kincaid of Grant, Michigan.

Mr. Kincaid comes from a family of farming people, his father at the present time being a successful operator of farm projects on a large scale in western Michigan. Mr. Kincaid is a graduate of the Grant high school and Michigan State College with the degree of Bachelor of Science in Agriculture. In addition, he has spent one year at Ferris Institute securing training in business studies and an additional year of graduate work in the School of Business Administration of the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Kincaid comes highly recommended by the State Supervisor of Vocational Education, by the Michigan State College, and by numerous other authorities. During the first year of the development of the vocational agriculture course, Mr. Kincaid will have a course in Agricultural Biology for Freshmen and a class in Farm Crops for Sophomores. Since this is the initial year of the course, Junior and Senior boys will also be admitted to these classes if they so desire.

In addition to these initial steps in the building of a full agricultural course, Mr. Kincaid will handle the work in various business subjects including Business Law, Typing, and Bookkeeping. This arrangement will make it possible for the work of the six upper grades to be handled by six departmental teachers with the superintendent handling surplus classes in the various departments.

At last week's regular meeting of the Board, Superintendent Poore also reported upon the World's Fair Trip of the Senior Class, showing a total expenditure of $440.00 from the class.

CHAPTER I

It was a lonely land—a lonely sea. But Eric loved them both. One was his father—this great Alaskan country stretching one-ninth of the way around the world—and the old gray ocean, wearing a billowing cloak of mist, was surely his mother. The sea had many husbands—Phoenicia last night, Venice in the dawn, England and Holland and the little Yankee land in mid-morning, and to each she has borne a breed of giants—but now she has taken a younger, bolder lover in the North, and this wind-tanned youth on the Bradford cannery dock was a child of that mating.

His full name was Eric Ericsson. It was typical of the new species—if could as well have been Kris-Nansen, or Nils Larsen, or Storker Storkersen. Like the other founders of the clan, his parents had come from Norway's windy coast first to dig for gold in Alaskan gravels, then more to their liking, to fish for halibut and salmon in the fjords of the Northwest. But neither Eric nor his classmates were Norwegians. Born on Alaskan soil, they were the product of a new environment—new ways, waters, men, and winds.

As the son of a ship captain, of course he had had good schooling. At the close of his second year at the University of Alaska at Fairbanks, he had gone abroad to specialize in geography, ethnology, and economics—in the fore-caste of a tramp steamer. Now, still under thirty, he had papers entitling him to sail as master on any ship, of any tonnage, anywhere on the seven seas.

As he sat on the dock at Spinnaker Harbor, his old Alaskan could tell his breed. Both his ancient mother and his young father had put their mark upon him. He was tall and lean, like and loose-jointed, by the Alaskan pattern; and he walked like a springy rather than a sailor, with a swing of his legs, lightly, swiftly, and thrustily. He sat alone, ignoring the motley crowd on the dock. He had little in common with Alaskan sailors or the plain muskies; even less with Sandomar's gang. There were ten of those men, all recently freed from the cannery force, and like Eric himself, they were idly watching a sleek yacht, stranger to these waters, glide into the harbor.

In Eric's heart dwelt a strange love, deep and wide, for most all craft on all seas, but an amused half-smile flickered across his lips as he surveyed the stylish visitor. Obviously she was built for luxuries, cruising, not to rough it in these half-charted northern waters. In venturing here she was surely living up to her name, the Intrepid.

The elderly captain docketed her handsily, and the gangplank was run out. To Eric's amusement the greater part of the crew immediately walked off. Not only the kit-bags in their hands but the gray, grimy look on their faces told plainly that they were done with the Intrepid for the rest of their seafaring lives.

Eric spoke to the first officer, a stalwart Yankee type that he knew and respected. "Looks like she's going to be short-handed the rest of her cruise."

"There's six left out of eighteen," the man answered anxiously. "Our time's up, but he won't hit for home. Now he can cool his heels here, or else run the whole ship himself, as he wanted to from the first. We're going to go out on the Catherine D."

"Who do you mean by 'he'?" The skipper.

"The old man all right. I mean Horton, the millionaire who owns her. He's not a yachtsman, but he won't stay in the harbor. Always coming between his skipper and the crew, he has no respect for an officer, much less a sailor—he treats 'em all like dummies. Our fellows are Americans; they won't put up with that. Besides, he expects the impossible. All his life, he's got what he wanted, bought it with his checkbook, and he can't see why we can't supply the weather and the tides he demands. Told him he can't go some place, and that's where he's going to start for."

The officer swore, throatily and emphatically, and marched off. A burly, middle-aged man in smart yachting cap—no doubt Horton himself—now disembarked. With him was an athletic man of thirty, with a lean, scholarly face, thin lips, and gray eyes catching sight of Eric. Horton signalled him up with an imperious gesture.

"What's your name?"

Eric's sparkling blue eyes turned hard gray. "I am Mr. Ericsson."

"Do you want a job? I need some men to replace those proud devils who just walked off. What can you do on a ship?"

"Taking your questions one at a time—" and his lips twitched at the corners. "I might take a berth, provided I found a good one. I came as first officer of the Redmond, lying here through the season, and I expect to go out with her next fall. I have master's papers—and I might tell you that I'm a proud devil, too."

"I notice it." He turned to his young companion. "Roy, I think this chap will do for first officer." Then, to Eric: "Those men over there took good to me. Would they do for my crew?"

Eric followed his gaze to find Sandomar's gang watching with lighted eyes, but he could not say that they looked good to him. They were here solely through a mistake made by Bradford's absent partner, the hiring, as foreman, of a seemingly honest trawler known as Swede. This pale-eyed, pale-haired thing had taken advantage of a labor shortage to call in, from up and down the coast, vultures of his own feather, promising not only lucrative employment, but a chance for wholesale thievery of packed salmon cases. True, the piracy had failed, and the gang had been fired, but the damage had been done. The Catherine took them off Bradford would not sleep soundly.

A strange pack for a far place like Spinnaker Harbor! Swede was still his nominal leader, but his real chief was a former sea officer, known as Sandomar, an enormous dusky-skinned Pole more gorilla than man. He had won his leadership in spite of what seemed a hopeless handicap, complete deafness. But always with him, like a jackal following a tiger, went an undersized, ratty-eyed, cockney who acted as his ears. This man, who seemed to have no mind but a stomach, interpreted all he heard to a kind of shorthand sign language—a swift flicker of his fingers half the time, unnoted by his fellows. Sandomar was not a mule, and made his answers in a deep monotone.

Besides these two and Swede, there was a short, plump, oily-skinned poor white nicknamed Cooky; two pelagic sailors known as Big Smith and Little Smith; DeValera, not a Latin but a black Irishman; a renegade Australian called Sydney Bill; and two nondescript Russians, sailors and fools, whose names never seemed twice the same.

"You don't want that gang," Eric told Horton. "They'd likely scuttle your ship and cut all your throats, before you get back."

"Then how about taking some of Bradford's hands?"

Before Eric could answer, two others of the yachting party came down the gangplank and joined the group. One was a thin little woman in black, nimble and bright-eyed for all her middle-aged seventy years; Eric suspected that she was Horton's widowed mother, the wife of the original founder of the fortune. The other, and Eric accepted it as sober fact, was probably beyond any soul that had ever set foot on these isles.

He would never forget his first glimpse of Nan Horton. On this raw coast, beside a savage sea, she was an alien and exotic spirit.

Word viking of the North, Eric was drawn to dusky women. "Nan Horton was hardly a woman yet, merely a girl in her early twenties, but every line of her slight form was curved, the front of her close-fitting jacket revealed firm, round hills, and her slim arms, bare almost to her shoulders, were tanned golden brown. Her dark, round little face, with dull rose cheeks, had a trace of arrogance—no doubt she was willful and undisciplined as Horton himself, but her pointed hazel eyes were warmly lighted within their heavy dark fringe of lashes, clear, kindly, and strangely steadfast; and her mouth was wistful.

Eric returned to earth to hear Horton repeating his question, in impatient tones. "How about taking some of Bradford's hands, I say?"

Eric's expression quickly changed. "Bradford has none to spare." "What if I offer double pay? That would fetch 'em, wouldn't it?" "I don't think so. Besides, it would be mighty poor sportsmanship for a yacht owner like you to make such an offer."

Eric spoke slowly and quietly, and Nan Horton opened her clear, hazel eyes. Horton's rat-trap mouth grew hard. "I don't require any advice from you."

"You asked for it, and I'm going to give it to you, Bradford's short-handed anyway. If he loses any more men, just at the start of the season, he can't handle his fish. If you try anything like this, you can expect trouble."

"And you'll deserve it, too, Felix." It was the old woman's voice, clear as a bird's. "Your sport is not as important as Mr. Bradford's work, or any man's. Of course you can't steal his men."

"But that argument can be reduced to an absurdity," said the younger man called Roy. "If you start thinking of other people's interests instead of your own you'll soon find yourself in the sentimental soup. Don't you see that if we don't recruit our crew here, we'll have to loaf two weeks waiting for a fresh gang from Ketchikan?"

"I don't agree with you, Roy." It was Nan's contralto voice, with a bell-like richness of tone, and both men turned to her in surprise. "Usually I support you and Dad in the public be-damn attitude, but somehow this doesn't seem to me to be playing the game."

"Nan, you're talking as though life is a cricket match, or a romance," Roy spoke lightly, yet with a flash of his cold eyes. "Eric knows that there was a strong man—perhaps even stronger than the purse-proud millionaire, Felix Horton—who would likely win what he wanted from the world, whether it was wealth or power or Horton's daughter. Go ahead, Felix, and take what you need."

"That's what I propose to do," he turned to Eric. "What's that chap in the machine?"

"Johnnessen, Bradford's dock foreman."

"He'll do for a starter. We'll see whether his loyalty to his boss is very strong as to his pocketbook."

Johnnessen was called up and questioned. Would he ship on the Intrepid for twice his present pay? He shook his blond head.

"I'm very sorry, but we are short-handed, and I cannot spare myself. You see, we are very busy just now, and we will all be damn busy. I have no time to go yachting."

He marched stolidly away; a girlish giggle echoed Mother Horton's pale lips. "Nan's gray eyes brightened fleetingly, and even Roy smiled faintly and knowingly. "Just what we could expect from the simple Nordic," Roy said.

But Horton's big jaws flushed. "I'll be hanged if I'm going to rot up here for two weeks. We'll take these bully boys there." He indicated Sandomar's gang. "They're a hard lot, but we can handle them, and maybe they won't be so haughty as those sterling Americans that just walked off. And Ericsson here'll ship as first officer."

Eric's eyes were not now the tint of deep water in the sunlight, but of herring sea shoals under winter clouds. "I don't want the job. I don't care to work for you. You asked for it, and you've got it. I just saw you try to break up Bradford's crew with the strength of your checkbook, and I'm not going to okay that; or help you make a cruise in our waters."

He was looking into Horton's face, so he did not see the quick flash, possibly anger, perhaps some other emotion, in his daughter's eyes. But as he turned away, he heard Mother Horton's unqualified approval.

"I don't blame him a bit, Felix. If your father was alive, he'd say the same."

Eric turned to his snubbing block, but the matter was not yet closed. An entirely new light was thrown on it when the elderly captain sought Eric and recalled that they had met before. Their eyes grew brilliant as they recalled a dive in Jibouti; a strange, hair-raising, snaky dance by a water-giant; the tint of old ivory; and a clashing row with half a dozen Arabs.

"I was a better man then than now," Captain Wayne said. "Five years makes a slight difference. And maybe that's why I hate to face this cruise alone."

"You still have your chief's earner," Eric said.

"Yes, but he can't help me handle that pack of wolves I've just signed up." Then, man to man: "Ericsson, forget the boss's high-handed ways, and help me out. And I'm not speaking for myself alone."

Eric struggled in vain against rising curiosity. "Who are you speaking for?"

"Horton's girl. She asked me to talk to you. I think she approved of your stand, but like me, she's uneasy about those thugs. She won't admit it, but I know she is. Anyway, she wants you on the ship. And Ericsson, I want you, too. As another master mariner, I ask you to try to strain a point and help me out."

Eric's gaze wandered off to the deck of the yacht, on which stood a vivid figure. Curly dark hair blowing in the wind, dull rose cheeks in the sunlight, and for one brief second, steady, tranquil, hazel eyes challenging his own. Yes, this was a call he could hardly refuse. . . . And he was only twenty-eight, the possessor of two strong hands and a boy's heart fancy free.

"I'd be under your orders, not Horton's."

"Yes, I won't let him interfere."

"When do you want to sail?"

"Right now. Sandomar and his crowd have already gone aboard."

"Wait till I get my kit-bag. I'm going, too."

CHAPTER II

Eric had feared that relations between himself and the yacht owner would be strained, but he was wrong. Horton had won his point—to him Eric was simply another tool that had related him at first; but now had bent to his use.

For convenience sake, he introduced the new first officer to the yachting party. The young man was Roy Stuart, himself the son of wealth, an amateur of considerable standing in certain fields of biology and ethnology, the choice of Horton for his daughter's hand, and apparently of the girl herself, and certainly the most complex and perfect intellectual machine that had ever crossed Eric's trail. Roy was the only guest accompanying the party was Marie Chambaud, Nan's maid from old Lorraine, and a be-appealed, grave, little man named Wilcox, of Eric's own age, who appeared to be Horton's secretary.

"And this," said the yacht owner introducing his mother, "is Madam Horton."

"Madam Fiddlesticks," the old lady snorted. "Young man, that's simply some more of Felix's nonsense. My enemies call me the old witch, strangers call me Mrs. Horton, and to my friends—and I hope you'll soon be among the number—I'm Mother Horton. Felix thinks that's plebeian, but I like it."

Horton had chosen one of the loneliest and least known cruising grounds in the seven seas, the north side of the Aleutian Island chain.

"North of Igak Island, far to the west, there's a great shoal, sixty miles in diameter," Horton said. "I propose to penetrate it, and find some uncharted islands."

Eric looked unheeded. "But you can't get in!"

"We'll see! I've never sailed yet on an undertaking. Where any ship of our draft has gone, the Intrepid can follow. That's final!"

"It's the reefs and tides and weather that are final, up in these seas," Eric said. "What makes you think a ship has ever been in there?"

"Roy Stuart has record of it. In an old Russian diary. An early explorer named Kiriolof found a pass through the shoals into deep water, and came to some inhabited islands. If the people are still there, you know how the Aleuts migrate from island to island—they are of course visited by occasional traders, out from Kamchatka, perhaps every year."

"I've never heard of it."

"My theory is that the shoals are a hollow Eric, the submerged tops of mountains, but the center is deep water. Anyway we'll soon see."

Through Unimak pass and westward the Intrepid ventured. Already she was far off the sea-lanes, and the only craft she glimpsed was a gray speck half across the world that was the masts of one of America's far-flung coast guard.

Eric was alone on the boat deck when a misty figure appeared in the moonlight. It was Nan Horton, seeking the reality of the strange dreams of adventure that the enchanted night awakened in her young heart.

Wholly without embarrassment, with a frankness and self-assurance that put him on guard, she came and stood beside him, her arm almost touching his. For a long time she gazed in silence into the starry sky. Yet she did not give the impression of ignoring Eric's presence. It was as though some ancient and intimate bond between them made words unnecessary.

Eric's heart gave a curious fling. Instantly he knew, without knowing how or why, that Nan and himself could never ignore each other; that they could not even pretend to be strangers; that they reacted upon each other like wind on water. As a sailor he believed that their fates were interbound.

Yet she was her father's daughter. Although she was fine where Horton was coarse, generous where he was mean, gentle where he was hard, yet his arrogance had come to her straight. Possibly she obeyed no laws but her own desires. She would take, but not selfishness—and she was imperious to the last curly hair of her beautiful head. Like her father, she made tools of those who came into her circle—not merely to exalt her own place, not as a shoddy schemer but as a queen—to live to the full and enrich her days.

With his quick perceptions, schooled by wide travel, Eric saw through her game. Moreover, he did not propose that she should play it on him. He continued to stare out to sea. He made no play of ignoring her; he simply waited for her to raise her veil. At last she turned and spoke in deep, throbbing, fello tones.

"You're Mr. Ericsson, aren't you?"

"He met her glances coolly. "You know who I am."

"Of course I do. I remembered your name the second I heard it. But it's much too long. I shan't call you by it, except in company. What does it matter anyway?"

In the twilight she saw his dim smile. "I suppose you're hinting you'd like to call me Eric."

The long pause showed that this shot had gone home. "As the mistress of the ship," she said at last, "I don't think I must hint for permission to call 'one of my officers' by his first name."

"As mistress of the ship, please call me Mr. Ericsson." He spoke calmly and simply. "As an officer, I can't answer to any other address." He paused, and she suspected that he was smiling. "But up here in the moonlight you may call me anything you please, and I'll call you Nan."

Secretly she conceded that he had won the first brush, but it only made her more reckless. "Why should we call each other anything?" she asked dreamily. "Why should we talk at all? I want to forget who you are, who I am, everything except the magic of this unbelievable night."

He saw her profile in the nebulous light, and saw that she was not wholly sincere. She was trying to make use of him to enrich the hour, to fill her own cup, to sharpen her sense of being, but her need was real and strong, not just cheap vanity. She was no milk-and-water girl, but tempered steel and fire. Intelligence, spirit, exquisite sensibilities, a devouring thirst for life, these were the sparks that never let her rest. Now her eyes were starry, her cheeks blazing, her hands trembling.

Happily he took the challenge. When she turned to him, her face lifted, his hands slipped under her fur cloak to her silky shoulders and slowly drew her close. She made no attempt to avoid his kiss, but met it with eager lips. But when she tried to draw away, he would not let her go.

"She had only meant to taste of this cup, a mere moonlight whim; but she felt his arms like hands of steel, and his lips still pressed hers. He let her breathe at last but he still held her close and smiled into her eyes. And for all her pride, a low cry broke from her tense throat."

Publishers Enjoy Outing at Frankfort

As the result of the preparation of what was declared to be the most elaborate program ever prepared for their pleasure, publishers of weekly newspapers in Michigan spent three days of last week in a most enjoyable manner at Frankfort-on-the-Lake, and adjacent territory of that beautiful northland.

Gathering at this popular Lake Michigan port on Thursday the publishers spent the afternoon in renewing acquaintances and making new friendships with the hospitable hosts—the people of Frankfort. Most active among the hosts was the convention chairman, A. P. Peterson (Big Pete), publisher of the Benzie County Patriot at Frankfort, who was responsible in no small way for the success of the three-day outing.

Thursday evening at 6:30 the publishers and their families were guests at a complimentary dinner given by the city of Frankfort at the Park Hotel, located on the shore of Lake Michigan. Mr. Leutke, village president, cordially welcomed the assembly to the city in a short address in which he outlined some of the natural advantages of their city which makes it so popular as a resort center. He stated that the temperature at Frankfort is always 10 to 20 degrees cooler than inland cities of the north, due to the fact that they are located on a point which places them about seven miles farther out in the lake than any other shore city. During the extreme hot weather of a few weeks ago the highest temperature at Frankfort was 75 degrees.

Schuyler Marshall, publisher of the Clinton County News at St. Johns, presided as toastmaster at the banquet. The two outstanding talks on the program were given by Senator Leon Case, publisher of the Waterbury Record, who presented the accomplishments of the last session of the legislature as seen from a Democratic standpoint, and Representative Vernon J. Brown, publisher of the Ingham County News at Mason, Republican floor leader, who presented his version of the session.

On Friday morning the group left Frankfort for an all-day trip through the Leelanau (translated in Indian means "Land of Delight") Peninsula. This tour took them past Glen Lake, considered to be one of the two most beautiful lakes in the world. At noon the party were guests of the city of Leland at a dinner. They then proceeded to Northport, the tip of the peninsula, which is lined with magnificent summer homes, and scenery that is beautiful to say the least. From that point the party drove down the other side of the peninsula to Suttons Bay, across to Lake Leelanau and back to Frankfort where, in the evening, they were given free access to theatre, dance halls or card parties.

Saturday morning the publishers and their families were given a complimentary breakfast at the Northway Hotel at Beulah, guests of that village.

The climax of the three-day party was the complimentary boat trip on the Ann Arbor ferry Wabash. The boat left the Frankfort dock at 1:30 and the three-hour ride took the party around the beautiful Manitou Islands and in sight of the largest sand dunes in the world.

The publishers and their families were loud in their praise of the magnificent beauty of the great resort centers surrounding Frankfort and the entire peninsula, and many expressed the desire to return to that beautiful spot of the north to spend a much longer vacation period. In fact, some of them remained to spend another week before returning to their homes.

Such hospitality as was extended to this group of Michigan newspapermen is rarely excelled and every publisher who was present to enjoy the outing will not hesitate in recommending that portion of the state as an ideal vacation spot.

As the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. advertises, "Vacation in Michigan."

LAMBARTH REUNION

Descendants of the Lambarth family held their annual reunion Sunday at Sodd's grove, Pleasant Lake, with 100 members and seven visitors attending. Following the dinner, Herman Braun of Milan presided as toastmaster, the program consisting of addresses by Ernst M. Wurster, Otto Haab, Albert Fiegl and Mrs. Lydia Dietele of Ann Arbor, also a banjo solo and recitations. Mrs. Dietele was the oldest member present.

Officers elected are: President—Otto Haab, Ann Arbor. Vice Pres.—Ben Schneider, Bridge-water.

Secretary—Hein Lambarth, of Bridge-water.

Treasurer—Alfred Lambarth, of Bridge-water.

Representatives were present from Lansing, Detroit, Saline, Manchester, Bridge-water, Ann Arbor and Chelsea.

Tower of London Group Dates Back to Year 1078

The Tower of London is a group of buildings once surrounded by a moat, which was drained three-quarters of a century or more ago. Originally it was a single tower, what is now called the White Tower, which was built by William the Conqueror in 1078, says a writer in the Boston Globe.

The Romans had a fort on the site. There were two bastions in the time of Alfred the Great in the ninth century.

The fortress for centuries contained the royal palace, the treasury and most of the public buildings. The old royal residence was torn down in the time of Cromwell. Charles II, who spent the night there before his coronation, was the last monarch to occupy the Tower of London.

The Thames runs on the south side of the Tower, and the entrance from this direction is the famous Traitors' Gate, where prisoners were brought in when they were tried for treason. Heads of traitors were once exhibited on this portal. To the west of the Tower is the Great Tower hill, where prisoners used to be executed.

The yeomen of the guard, who watch the Tower, are known as "Beefeaters." The word may have come originally from "buffetor," or attendants at the king's buffets. There is a legend that they used to have to test all the food prepared, that royalty might be protected against poison.

EDISON MARSHALL

Author of

"Forlorn Island"

Edison Marshall, the author of the unusual story, "Forlorn Island," which was to publish serially, is especially well known in the field of American literature. Asked for a brief sketch of himself and his work, he has given us the following:

"I come naturally by a love of adventure and far places. The Marshalls arrived from England in 1854. They always kept close to the frontier—Alaska by 1830, California, in 1849, and only came back when there was a chance to get in on a war.

"I was born in Indiana—Father had returned from California, and was editor and publisher of a newspaper—in 1894. We all went out to Oregon in 1907, and I didn't get back till the war. Getting a taste for outdoor adventure in the big Oregon woods, I have since hunted big game all over Alaska (the Aleutians, in the Arctic and the Siberian Coast), Africa, and southern Asia.

"I wrote 'The Heart of Little Shikara' twelve years ago, before I had ever been in India.

"I am the author of a good many novels of romantic adventure, among the best being 'The Snowshoe Trail,' 'The Missionary,' and 'The Doctor of Lone-Island.' I will never write anything but romance, as I believe it is the highest form of fiction, and it is what I like."

Mr. Marshall might have added that he won the O. Henry memorial prize for the best short story in 1921; that he endowed the Edison Marshall annual short story contest at the University of Oregon; his alma mater; that he has been very much of a world traveler to out of the world places including Alaska, Siberia, Central Africa, Indo-China, India and numerous other sections. His home is Seven Gables, Augusta, Ga.
