June 26, 1969.

The front page furnished news of general interest, national news especially about New York, and fiction stories. Pages abounded with ads about patent medicines. One offered $5,000 to "persons producing any medicine able to show one-third as many living permanent cures of rheumatism and neuralgia as Dr. Fitler's Vegetable Rheumatic Remedy, and $100 to persons not cured Headlines on news items were small, bold-faced and uniform. although display ads bore numerous illustrations and a large selection of sizes and styles of type. Many bore the name of Glazier, and many others were from firms_out-of-town.

One occasion where a news item merited more than a small headline was a five-deck headline giving the "Thrilling details of the terrible conflagration in Boston," among other informa-

Competition Begins

A competitor arose in 1889 when William Emmert, Jr., founded The Chelsea Standard. printed at Main and Park Sts. The paper sported a smaller fivecolumn format than its established competition. Display advertising filled with illustrations leaped from the front page, and news of national, international and local interest quietly occupied the middle columns.

The paper was published Fridays and was much briefer about local itmes than its later descendents. "Two weddings have occurred in our vicinity within the past week and we wish them all long and happy lives" was the entire account of local weddings one week. ...

Although the paper was still heavy with foreign, national and general news, local items were given-more emphasis than in former years. The Chelsea Standard was still chock full of Poso's eure for consumption" and "Epp's cocoa breakfast for many subtle maladies ready to attack at a weak spot."

The Chelsea Standard was purchased from Emmert by O. T. Hoover in July, 1891 and continued in the same tradition.

The First Consolidation Glenn Stimson bought The Standard and then consolidated The Standard and The Herald in 1905. The first issue of The Chelsea Standard-Herald came out Jan. 11, 1906, complete with four pages of color comics and

1,800. A full-page ad offered The Standard-Herald and Ann Arbor Daily News together for $2 per year by mail. The new 12-page paper sported seven columns, maps, pictures and illustrations.

Standard Enters 100th Year

The third paper to be started in Chelsea, The Tribune, offered competition to The Standard-Herald. The Tribune came out Sept. 19, 1907 with C. H. Young & Son listed as publishers, The first page contained local news. and the other seven pages were advertisements, fiction stories, and general news. The Tribune grew into a bi-weekly published by Charles Young & Son, then sold to Ford Axtel. C. W. Klamser, a newcomer to Chelsea, bought it around 1922.

Meanwhile, the competing Chelsea Standard-Herald was bought from G. C. Stimson by O. T. Hoover, a former Standard owner, in March, 1908, He changed the name back to the briefer Chelsea Standard. The eight-page paper made frequent use of pictures, illustrations and a variety of type faces, although the news photograph had yet to become popular here. Color printing had also come and gone and the paper was printed in black and white.

Local news was gaining importance and short, newsy items dominated the front page.

M. W. McClure took over the Standard in December, 1920 and sold it a year and a half later to E. H. Aherns. Aherns was publisher for only five months before McClure bought it back in November, 1922. Two months later, A. B. McClure, the publisher's brother, bought half interest in the business.

On Jan. 1. 1924 the McClure brothers bought the Tribune from C. W. Klamser, thus adding a third paper to the ancestry of the present-day Chelsea Standard.

When the McClure brothers dissolved their partnership in 1928, they sold the paper to E. E. Brown of Ann Arbor. Brown, an experienced newspaper publisher, took into his employ George Davis and Freeman A. Huston, long-time printers around Chelses, and G. F. Adams, a newcomer to Chelsea.

In December, 1928 M. W McClure concluded that he would like to return to Chelsea and

Dr. J. L. Flinn

Dr. G. N. Koffeman PAINFUL RESULT OF BRACHIAL NEURITIS "FROZEN SHOULDER"

Arm ache is a very common symptom and few giveit much attention when it first occurs

However, the underlying cause is a serious situation in the Brachial plexus of nerves and usually is in the form of an inflammation of the nerves themselves. As the neuritis progresses there is numbness, tingling and outright pain experienced in the neck, shoulder, and arm even extending to the fingers at times. The outcome, unless treated properly may be painful "frozen shoulder" where it becomes all but impossible to raise the arm, and the more distant prognosis indicates that arthritis may follow.

Chiropractic has been correcting the cause of Brachial neuritis for some time, by removing the offending nerve pressures in the spine. If you have suffered with this condition it would be well to consult your Chiropractor, he has been placed in your community to serve you.

By LOUIS BURGHARDT

Do you remember when sixteen of the best qualified, professional drivers in the country tangled in an accident on the straightaway-within minutes after starting the 500 mile race on Memorial Day at "Engineapolis?" If these drivers don't have a chance when something goes wrong, what chance do every day drivers have on Mighways when driving at breakneck speed?

High speed causes blood baths on every holiday and particularly on holiday week-ends. Every year we see more victims buried, hopes and lives shattered in sorrowing families all over the country. This shameful execution MUST stop.

Continually, we have pitiful predictions on highway deaths ... Remember this: It isn't always the other fellow who gets it. The predictions CAN INCLUDE YOU! If you KNEW you were doomed to die in traffic, what would you do about it? It is a harsh question. It has a simple answer. Why not do it then-and play safe? . . . JET AGE INCREASES THE CHOLERA DANGERS

Cholera, a most dangerous and annoying communicable disease, has rapidly spread from Southeast Asia to the Middle East. It poses a danger to travelers everywhere. Because of its five day incubation period, vacationers could reach home while still apparently well. The Public Health Service's Communicable Disease Center urges vaccinations for travelers, particularly if going to the infected areas anywhere in the world.

And no wonder-tonight they board a Pan-American plane at-France, where they will live forthe next two months as two of 40 U.S. high school students in France through "Youth for Understanding."

The girls were selected through tests and questionnaires locally, and financed through a $1,400 French club scholarship fund. French club members sponsored movies, an assembly, basketball games and other events to raise just over half of this amount, and contributions from several Chelsen organizationsboosted the scholarship to the needed $1.400.

Heidi and Bobbie will both be seniors at Chelsea High school next year. One of the qualifications was that the students be so the recipients will be able to share their experiences with · Heidi, 16-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Sprague, has completed three years of French. This will be her second summer of foreign living, since she spent last summer in Mexico as part of Musical Youth International. This group of students from Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and the Great Lakes area was comprised of a choral and orchestral group. Heidi played flute in the band,

Although the Mexico trip was a trip to a foreign country with a group of U. S. youths, it differed in that the students did not stay with the same family all summer. In fact the longest Detroit Metropolitan Airport for they stayed at one home was three nights.

In France, the girls will stay with one family, selected by a committee in France, all sum: mer. Heidi will stay with the Rivault family in Noisy-Le-Grand, 15 miles from Paris. Their four daughters are ages 23, 21, 18 and 15. Heidi plans to attend classes with them if school is still in session. Their father is a history teacher at a high school there.

While Heldi is there, she will celebrate her 17th birthday. "I'm interested in learning about their customs-little things like how they celebrate birthdays," Heidi explains. "I hope to become proficient in their language and habits."-Bobbie agrees. "The purpose of the trip is to combine learning the language with promoting understanding between the countries."

The girls will probably have an opportunity to see other countries there, since crossing from country to country is about as difficult in Europe as traveling
